Weekly Devotional Thoughts | Neil Hight

Is it worth remembering?

A grandfather was watching his two grandsons one day and as they were playing one of them hit the other. The victim ran to his grandfather to explain the wrong that had been done. The grandfather listened carefully and then told the boy to go write down the offense in the sand by the river bank. Later the boys were playing too close to the edge of the same river and the boy who had been assaulted earlier slipped and was about to fall into the rushing river below – but was rescued by the other boy. He ran to tell his grandfather of the heroism displayed by his cousin. This time the grandfather again listened carefully and then told the boy to go carve into stone that his cousin saved him. The boy asked why he was to write the wrong into sand and the right into a stone. The grandfather responded that the wrong written in the sand will soon be erased but the one in the stone will remain to be seen again and again. What are we choosing to write in stone in our lives?

May we all determine to choose to remember the good that comes our way and allow time to erase the bad.
